Summary of SRV session:

I am drawn immediately to an object at the site (doorknobing) which is a black, hard, long thing, square on bottom and both sides, but cupped on top. see sketch

The site itself gives the first impression of a single manmade structure, but on closer probing, seems to be a set of structures, "tied" together by some kind of "wall" which has a very rough texture. The entire area seems to be made of whitish buildings surrounded by wide open, rolling land.

Inside the site there is a place where the important gestalt is of small instruments. This place is cold and "uncaring" (AOL: like a zoology lab or morgue). There is a person (man?) at this place who sees the surroundings as an opportunity, but also has a very "grudgy" frustration that there is no chance for advancement because there is no time, and too many other demands. The purpose of this place escapes me, as I immediately go into different AOL drives each time I try to find out. There is a definite feeling of curiosity about the site (on my part), but it is accompanied with the feeling that I really don't like this place, and shouldn't touch anything or let anything there touch me.
